

PAWLICE UNCOVER BODY

Associated Pets- The pawlice uncovered the sleeping body of a calico last Saturday. Authorities say that the calico crawled under the blankets to get warm and she fell asleep. Her human slaves searched for her for hours until detective E.M. Sanchez discovered the slumbering feline just after 6pm. When asked why she didn't respond to her humans calling out, she replied, "it was so entertaining to watch them." This was the only comment we could get before she went back to sleep.

Beauty

Is Sunbathing Bad for You?

We all do it. And no, I am not talking about licking our butts. It is our daily goal to seek out rays of sun and soak them up before they disappear. But, with all these humans saying they need sunscreen, is this a problem for cats? Upon polling three other felines, I can safely say, "no." In my research, I have found no downside to catching a few rays. Based on countless hours in the sun, I can prove that the only hazard is pulling a muscle from stretching out the length of a football field. So my furry friends, bathe on!

-Bea Uti

Pawlice Log

Humans Trespassing

February 10, 2018: Humans caught trespassing at the home of Emilita Siders. Upon waking from her nap, Miss Siders discovered the intruders and hid until they finally left. After hours of trauma, she punished her human for allowing this to happen.

Caption this Photo

Send Submissions to:

butwiththemind@gmail.com

